Evansville anteing up for Quayle campaign

INDIANAPOLIS — Who cares if Dan Quayle can spell potato; he can spell Evansville.

He's M-O-N-E-Y.

The Pocket City, long known as a Democratic haven, is responsible for more than 25 percent of all the individual Hoosier money that has flowed into Quayle's 2000 bid for the presidency.

Business executives, school employees, coal company executives and a former Democrat, now under fire for allegedly stealing money before leaving office have generated $103,250 for the much-maligned former vice president.

"I think he's had it rough," said Eula Hipp, owner of Hipp Nursery Hipp, who doesn't align herself with either major political party, said she likes Quayle.

"We believe that he is for the family and believe me, the family needs help."

Hipp said. She gave $1,000.

Bob Osenberg, a longtime Republican loyal, has for years sent Quayle a tie for Christmas during his decade-long friendship.

Quayle calls him "Big O" when he calls, Osenberg said.

This year Osenberg wrote Quayle two checks for $1,000 each. One from him, and one from his wife, Norma.

"My wife didn't know it because I didn't tell her," Osenberg said.

Quayle has so far raised $2 million for his campaign. Indiana is the top contributing state for Quayle, who served as a U.S. Senator before being picked as

Evansville's first radio station let children sing on the air

I REMEMBER

...WGBF as Evansville's first radio station and Paul Clark as its main voice.

Olle Dildy whistled musical tunes on Sunday afternoons, and Hiney Dingler and His Little German Band played on Sunday evenings. On a summer night, you could stand outside the studio at 519 Vine St. and hear them play.

On Saturdays, if you were a child and had a Powerhouse candy bar wrapper, you could sing over the radio.

One Saturday morning, so many children wanted to sing "On the Good Ship Lot-Lip" that they had to sing it in a group.
